

Abstract

The present invention relates to a process and means for producing an improved sugar beet, in particular a sugar beet which exhibits an increased content of sucrose, a reduced rate of sucrose breakdown during storage and an improved growth. The invention also relates to the use of at least two gene constructs for generating such a plant and to nucleotide sequences which are employed in this connection.